Features Key:

- New Fantasy Grounds Preferred Package. 101 new monster stats!
- Adaptation and automation rules: items, skills, spells for the campaign.
- Graphical map of Prosperville.
- NPCs with special keywords. Well, two.
- NPCs are responsible for background details. Fine, place a little ice sculpture.

Game Play:

- Since we are not playing Dungeons and Dragons 3.5, we don't have much in the way of stats for the players.
- For the GM:
  - Set monsters, the monsters are independent of each other and always follow the rules of the preferred package. (GMs have 5 monsters if the preferred package has at least 5 monsters to allow for randomness.)
  - As a GM, you decide whether and where to place monsters.

Campaign:

- Make the combat: players attack monsters in turns. Each monster does one attack on the turn, followed by its ability and then the player's next turn. Monsters can attack twice in their turn. Players attack by attempting to beat a monster's dex/power. Each player and monster can have a combat plan from 1 to 10 (where 10 is the highest possible combat success). In the case of a tie, the player and monster must both make their combat plans separately. Only 1 of their plans can be tied to another plan. Players can attack only monsters they are now adjacent to. If the monster is adjacent to more than 1 player, then they can attack all the players
- At the start of the game, the players set a combat plan, but they don't reveal what plan they set. The players can conflict with each other's plans (de-conflict) if they aren't convinced by the monster's stats.
- Monsters get their own ability for each player, and you set the trigger value when triggering that ability.

Recommended Requirements Fantasy Grounds 5.0.1 or up Platform Windows OSX Linux iOS1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a process for the production of erythromycin derivatives. 2. Description of the Prior Art WO-A1-85/03888 describes a process in which the olefin unit in the 2-position of erythromycin A or erythromycin A esters is reacted with a piperazine derivative having the 1-(1-substituted)ethyl substituent in place of the proton of the 2-piperazine nitrogen. However, due to the substitution of the secondary carbon atom of the olefin unit, an enantiomer was formed. Accordingly, this application is somewhat limited to the preparation of an erythromycin A derivative not containing the 2-acetyl group. WO-A-96/04133 describes a process in which the olefin unit in the 2-position of erythromycin A or erythromycin A esters is reacted with a bicyclic sulfonamide derivative (6-aza-5-oxo-2,3,7,8,12,tetradece-6-azatricyclo[7,5,0,0,13]tetradecan-8-yl) amino-4-methyl-piperazine-1-carboxylic acid ethyl ester. What's new:

Blizzard's official blog this week was called the "Aquatic Menace!," and a number of changes were announced concerning Wizards of the Coast's signature game, Magic: The Gathering. Among them, was a new card called Gemhide Vampire! What made this card interesting was not the minor change, but the name! Gemhide Vampire is actually a aquatic creature called a Gemhide Vampire. This creature counts as fish for creatures with "Gemhide" in their title. Many creatures, like Mirran Wizard, would have higher mana costs if they counted as fish. For instance, a Mirran Wizard would be at cost (1) mana (4) (5) instead of (1) mana (3). The same is true for Gemhide Vampire. If this creature counts as fish, it would now be able to be cast at an Interlude. Taking into account how Gemhide Vampire can be cast at an Interlude, and can pump creatures higher on the curve, the Gemhide Vampire will make a great finisher for a variety of decks, especially for aggro decks. As a finisher, it is fairly mana-efficient, and only needs to be cast once every three or four turns. Which is a pretty good amount of time given the high amount of life gain that will be on the board. In addition, it will give the deck it is in better card draw, as card draw is particularly useful when your deck has a lot of creatures, and a downside is that creatures at the top of the curve are more fragile than creatures towards the bottom. Importantly, this card also gives you a nice way to solve the issue of having too many more expensive 3/3 creatures on the board if you find yourself in a situation where you might have only a few creatures remaining to attack into the enemy's life total. Of course, just adding this creature to a deck would be pointless if you had access to lots of creature removal. To address this, I decided to look at what creature removal I would consider acceptable. Look for some of these cards, such as Myr Retriever or Power Overwhelming. These cards are generally considered to be good enough because they are versatile enough for the cards they replace. This would ultimately help you overcome the issue of not having direct removal targeting fish. Just make sure that you try to find out a variety of creature removal so you can replace them all in the future. A good tip here is to check out Born of
