“The real-life motion capture data provides the base for the new technology,” said Andrew Ottewell, Senior Producer, FIFA. “It’s complemented by additional data provided by the players themselves to make sure the gameplay always lives up to that player’s experience.” Users are able to customize features based on the different styles of play their favorite players have demonstrated. “One of the most exciting aspects of this game is how we’re able to use the data from the real-life players to accurately recreate their characteristics in the game,” added Gordon Hay, Lead Programmer. “We’ve approached the player templates (a base model for a player’s motions), ball and pitch motion features - by borrowing data from the real-life player, the differences become much more noticeable. We know this is a huge step for this type of football, but ultimately it’s allowing us to truly bring the experience of the real game into our game.”
