You'll also need the driver and software, which is available.Physico-chemical properties of salmon samples from the north-western Mediterranean region. The quality of salmon meat and skin was assessed by analytical and sensory analysis. Weight loss was a good indicator for the lipid content, as the greater the weight loss, the higher the lipid content, which ranged from 11.5% to 14.9% for salmon fillet and 15.5% to 18.9% for salmon skin. The highest protein content was recorded for the skin of farmed salmon, in comparison to that of wild salmon. Lactate levels were higher in farmed salmon than in wild, and no significant differences were found between farmed and wild salmon skin. A significant decrease in weight loss, protein content, and lactate level was noticed for salmon fillets from the sea trout introduction farms. For the sensory analysis, trained panelists evaluated raw and cooked salmon for general aspects (color, taste, smell), taste (flavor, taste quality), presence of off-flavor (off-flavor, taste-off-flavor, aromatic), fat content, raw fishy odor, and fishy flavor. For cooked salmon samples, only grilled salmon fillets were chosen for evaluation. Overall, salmon fillets from the sea trout introduction farms proved to be the most
